Angus Hutcheson

What makes Ango original

Chief designer, Ango

“observing, dreaming, experimenting, developing some more and then realising with light”

Angus is a British designer based in Thailand for the last ten years, dedicated to working with light. Forging new forms, using materials that were to hand, many of them natural, the Ango collection was gradually built up, and gained recognition in Thailand and internationally, with a string of awards and special pieces being shown at the Museum of Arts and Design in New York, the Hara Museum in Tokyo, and V.I.A in Paris.

Angus graduated in architecture with Honours at the Architectural Association in London.

Life + experiments

Where we're coming from?

We start from doing what we love, developing our own designs, and then creating teams to handcraft and realise each type of production. Connecting electric dreams with originality and sophistication, we create lighting and light fantasies that are uplifting and unique.

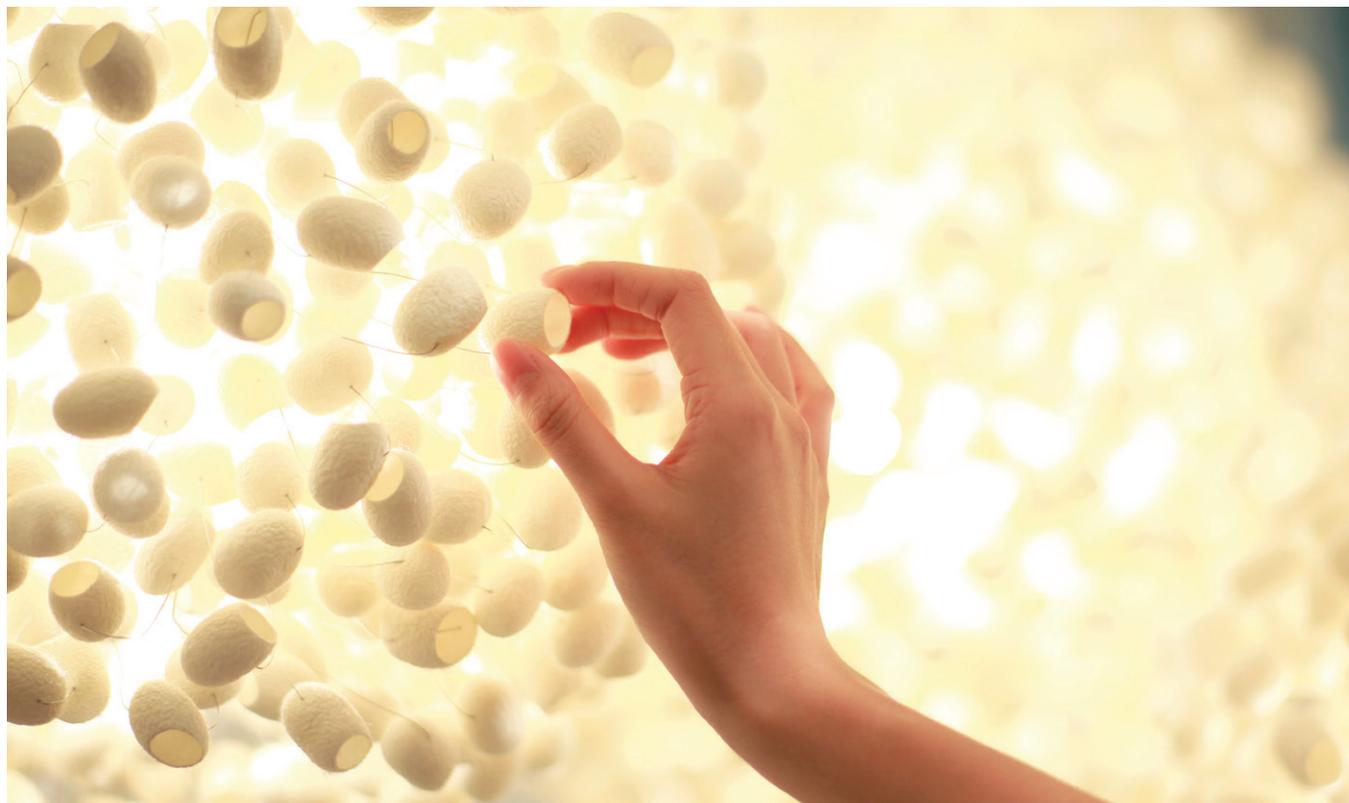

How we develop and create our designs

Working at the intersection between design, materials development and innovative production processes, all of the light diffuser materials we work with has its own character and is either a “found” natural one, or a composite / natural material developed by experimentation. We observe and investigate what’s possible with sometimes accidental or unpredicted outcomes.

The whole low impact / low energy intensive process of how we create our designs also represents our view of how enlightened, environmentally responsible 21st century design and production can be. The energy, purity and truthfulness of light is our starting point, creating design pieces with love that we hope will fulfill your space with light energy.

“Be what you seem to be”

Journeys in material exploration

Material

"Each material has its own character so I concentrate on creating the diffuser that is unique in how it refracts and reflects light"

Forging new forms, often using materials that were to hand, many of them natural, the whole low impact / low energy intensive process of how Anjo designs are realised also represents a view of how enlightened, environmentally responsible 21st century design and production can be.

Silk cocoon

Natural colour

The cocoon is composed of silk that is made in glands within the body of the silkworm. In commercial silk farming, silk thread (usually totaling hundreds of metres from each cocoon) is spun off from the cocoons after they've been boiled, but we are using the totally unprocessed cocoons.

The diffuser is formed of a random configuration of silk cocoons, each of which is attached to a hand soldered wire matrix. The process starts by attaching the silk cocoons to strands of wire. The first strands are then attached to a hand brushed stainless steel frame, and the layers of silk cocoon slowly built up, checking the overall form of the piece all along the way.

The colour of the material is a soft white that yellows a little with age. To clean diffusers in this material, we recommend that they be dusted or lightly vacuumed. The diffuser can also be removed and taken to a specialist dry cleaner.

Silk cocoon

Ebony colour

The cocoon is composed of silk that is made in glands within the body of the silkworm. In commercial silk farming, silk thread (usually totaling hundreds of metres from each cocoon) is spun off from the cocoons after they've been boiled, but we are using the totally unprocessed cocoons.

Mulberry tree bark

The branches of the mulberry shrubs are harvested in the autumn, and the innermost layer of bark (white bark) is stripped from the timber and boiled in a mixture of water and soda ash. The strips are then beaten by hand until they have been well separated.

The diffuser is formed by hand sewing each of the prepared clusters of fiber to a cotton grid, which has been fastened to the base structure.

The colour of the material is a soft white that yellows a little with age. To clean diffusers in this material, we recommend that they be dusted or lightly vacuumed.

Rattan

From strands of rattan, the skin is peeled off and the remaining "core" of the rattan is formed into 1 mm diameter wires in an extrusion process.

The rattan wires are then formed into diffusers starting with a base structure, and using the random weave technique that we've developed.

The colour of the extruded material is a soft yellow that deepens a little with age. To clean diffusers in this material, we recommend that they be dusted or lightly vacuumed.

Hand cast polymer

A non toxic water based polymer is used in a hand casting process, and is built up in layers on a mould.

As a reinforcement to the material, rattan wires or silk cocoon hemispheres are embedded into the material.

The colour of the material is a soft white that yellows a little with age. To clean diffusers in this material, we recommend that they be lightly vacuumed or wiped with a damp cloth.

Hand soldered wire matrix interwoven metalised thread

This lighting diffuser material consists of a hand soldered steel wire matrix which is then nickel coated, before being interwoven with metalised thread.

The colour of the material is a lustrous silver colour. To clean diffusers in this material, we recommend that they be lightly vacuumed or dusted with a dry duster, and they can also be very gently washed in warm water.

Hand soldered wire matrix

Nickel plated

This material comprises a self supporting hand soldered steel wire matrix which is then coated with nickel.

The colour of the material in nickel finish is a warm silver colour, while the gold finish is a yellowish hue.

To clean items in this material, we recommend that they be lightly vacuumed or dusted with a dry duster, and they can also be very gently washed in warm water.

Individualised design

ANGO custom

Ango Custom is the expanding division within Ango that creates special and unique installation lighting pieces for the project sector.

While each piece by Ango is a unique hand crafted limited edition of one, in Ango Custom we go further and whether working with the architect, lighting consultant, interior designer, or direct with the project owner, create something that is entirely original.

A deep expertise in the design, design development, fabrication and installation processes has been built up in the creation of sophisticated space-transformative light solutions, and either calling on existing Ango materials and techniques, or creating new solutions, we have the responsiveness and track record to make it happen.
